ADITUM ALTERNATIVE INCOME FUND COMMENTARY

June saw another difficult month in markets, a rough close to the second quarter of the year. With recession risk becoming more apparent, markets globally have a challenging task of navigating the uncertain path ahead. This is evident across markets, with bond markets specifically, which felt the strain and closed the month significantly lower. We saw Global investment grade close the month -3.2% lower and Global high yield down -6.43%.

Looking forward at interest rate expectations, markets have priced in rates climbing up to 3.4% in the US by 2023, with the UK following suit with expectations of up to 3% by 2023. Whilst policy makers globally continue to press forward in the fight to tame inflation, consumer confidence continues to deteriorate. Some may say that we will begin to see slight easing of inflationary pressures as recent data prints show strong inventory build-up in the manufacturing space, commodities prices slowly falling all further supported by China re opening post the recent lockdown, however we look to the next release of headline inflation to paint a true picture.

Fund performance was down -0.45% for the month. We saw strong and stable performance from our alternative exposures particularly in the European private debt and Global consumer loans space.

Overall performance was lower due to our liquid diversified fixed income holdings which has suffered for the most part of the year so far. Whilst performance in the liquid fixed income space has been disappointing, we view this as a potentially attractive entry point, though timing remains key in avoiding significant volatility in the portfolio.
